International Sand Sculpting Festival returns to Revere Beach

Here's what you need to know about the annual competition.

ELIE LEVINE

Escape the city for the weekend without going too far with the 2018 Revere Beach International Sand Sculpting Festival.

See some of the world's best sand sculptors, who will put their amazing skills on full display. Last year's festival drew a million attendees, and this year's is sure to be no less successful. The festival brings together more than 20 expert sand sculptors from as far away as Russia, Bulgaria, the Czech Republic and Sweden to compete for the grand prize.

Their creations, made from just sand and water, will no doubt impress. This year's theme is "Celebrating Literacy," so sculptors will honor the history and power of children's literature with their works. The festival will feature sand-sculpting lessons and amusement-park rides for the kids. Food trucks and local vendors will sell their wares and distribute free samples, and live entertainment will enhance your experience. The whole extravaganza will end with a dazzling fireworks display on Saturday night.

To get to Revere, take the Blue Line to Revere Beach or Wonderland. If you drive, there's parking at the Wonderland Garage.

'The Staircase,' 'Making a Murderer' lawyers talk Trump's impact on criminal justice reform

David Rudolf and Jerry Buting will be in the Boston area this weekend.

MATT JUUL

Netflix docu-series "The Staircase" and "Making a Murderer" haven't just piqued people's interests in true crime cases, they've also sparked discussions around criminal justice reform.

Fans of the series will get a chance to chat with Michael Peterson's attorney David Rudolf and Steven Avery's former lawyer Jerry Buting at the Center for Arts at the Armory in Somerville on Sunday at an event dubbed "True Crime: Shattering the Illusion of Justice." While audience members will get the chance to ask all their burning questions about the shows during the Q&A, Rudolf and Buting hope the evening will inspire others to take up the cause of fixing the justice system as well.

"For me, the important things are, No. 1, generating more discussion about the problems in the criminal justice system," Rudolf tells Metro. "And No. 2, talking more about the role of criminal defense lawyers and, hopefully, correcting people's misperceptions about what we do, why we do it and how we do it."

Buting—who, coincidentally, studied law under Rudolf at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill—believes that "The Staircase" and "Making a Murderer" cases have a lot in common as they "both illustrate flaws in the criminal justice system," despite being centered around people from two very different walks of life.

In particular, Rudolf wants to chat with fans about the issues of forensic junk science, a topic that the Bay State native should be familiar with thanks to the infamous incident with crime lab chemist Annie Dookhan, as well as false confessions and false guilty pleas.

"The same pressure that create false confessions also create false guilty pleas," Rudolf says. "Something I saw in 'Making a Murderer,' someone says, 'Innocent people don't confess.' Those of us who work in the system know that's simply not true."

Since appearing in "The Staircase," Rudolf has received numerous messages from fans who've changed their thoughts on criminal justice reform after watching the show.

"I've gotten messages from Republicans who say, 'I'm a Republican, I'm a conservative. I always favored the prosecution, but you've changed the way I think about these things,'" Rudolf says. "By exposing this to people, that gradually builds pressure for change."

Although both men believe that progress is being made, slowly but surely, on the state level, the rise of President Donald Trump has them worried about the federal government's approach towards fixing the justice system going forward.

"We were making real progress on junk science and getting rid of junk science, until Jeff Sessions decided he was going to cut back on that whole effort," Rudolf says. "That's what's happened, and that's a real problem."

"We have a president who called for the death penalty against the Central Park five, only to later find out that they were all exonerated and he never said sorry," he adds. "We have a real problem in terms of what the leadership in this country is doing."

'The Equalizer 2' isn't your average action sequel

Director Antoine Fuqua explains.
GREGORY WAKEMAN

Hard-hitting, brutal as well as poignant and touching, it was no surprise when a sequel to "The Equalizer" was greenlit following the action film's $192 million gross back in 2014.

Especially because it paired director Antoine Fuqua with Denzel Washington for a fourth time, as the duo looked to continue the story of Robert McCall, the retired CIA Black Ops operative who is now a vigilante, and who becomes even more incensed after a former colleague is murdered. During a recent chat with Fuqua, "The Magnificent Seven" and "Training Day" director admitted that Sony actually inquired about doing a sequel long before the first film had even come out.

"Talking about it started after the first test screening for 'The Equalizer.' We scored like a 91 or 92 with the audience," says Fuqua. "At the time, Amy Pascal was the head of the studio, so the conversations started then.

"They got much more real after the film opened, and then Richard went off to write the script," he adds. "A year later, we all got a draft that was pretty strong and pretty much the movie you see."

But while Fuqua and Washington were immediately interested in doing "The Equalizer 2," the duo also wanted to make sure that the follow-up felt unique and still appealed to those that missed the original.

"Most of the conversations I had with Denzel were, 'If we do another one the script had to be different from the first. It can't be the same movie. And it has to stand alone for the people that didn't see 'Equalizer 1'. Just as a movie," Fuqua says. "That was really what our focus was. We didn't even really use the word sequel.

That's more of a business term that studios use, it was not for us."

But how did Fuqua make sure that "The Equalizer 2" still connected to "The Equalizer"?

"The most important thing for me was that Robert McCall the character, his basic essence is the same, in that he stands for justice, he has certain qualities and OCDs, and he always gives the bad guys, most of the time, a chance to do the right thing. There were certain things like that, that we held on to as character traits," Fuqua explains. "From the first film we also learned that, you know, there's a tendency in Hollywood to get a little jaded. You know, you think everyone is a tough guy who likes these movies."

"In the screenings, people seemed to care a little bit more about the smaller things. The action scenes were fun, they talked about the corkscrew a lot, that kind of thing. But we really tried to put a lot more energy into what people seemed to resonate with, which was they cared about other people," he adds. "They cared about the simple things, like him trying to help young people, spend time with people. In the first film there was a girl called Jenny, who got her ring stolen, and he went to get it back. When she opens the draw and sees the ring, the audience just started clapping."

Fuqua says that he was surprised by this.

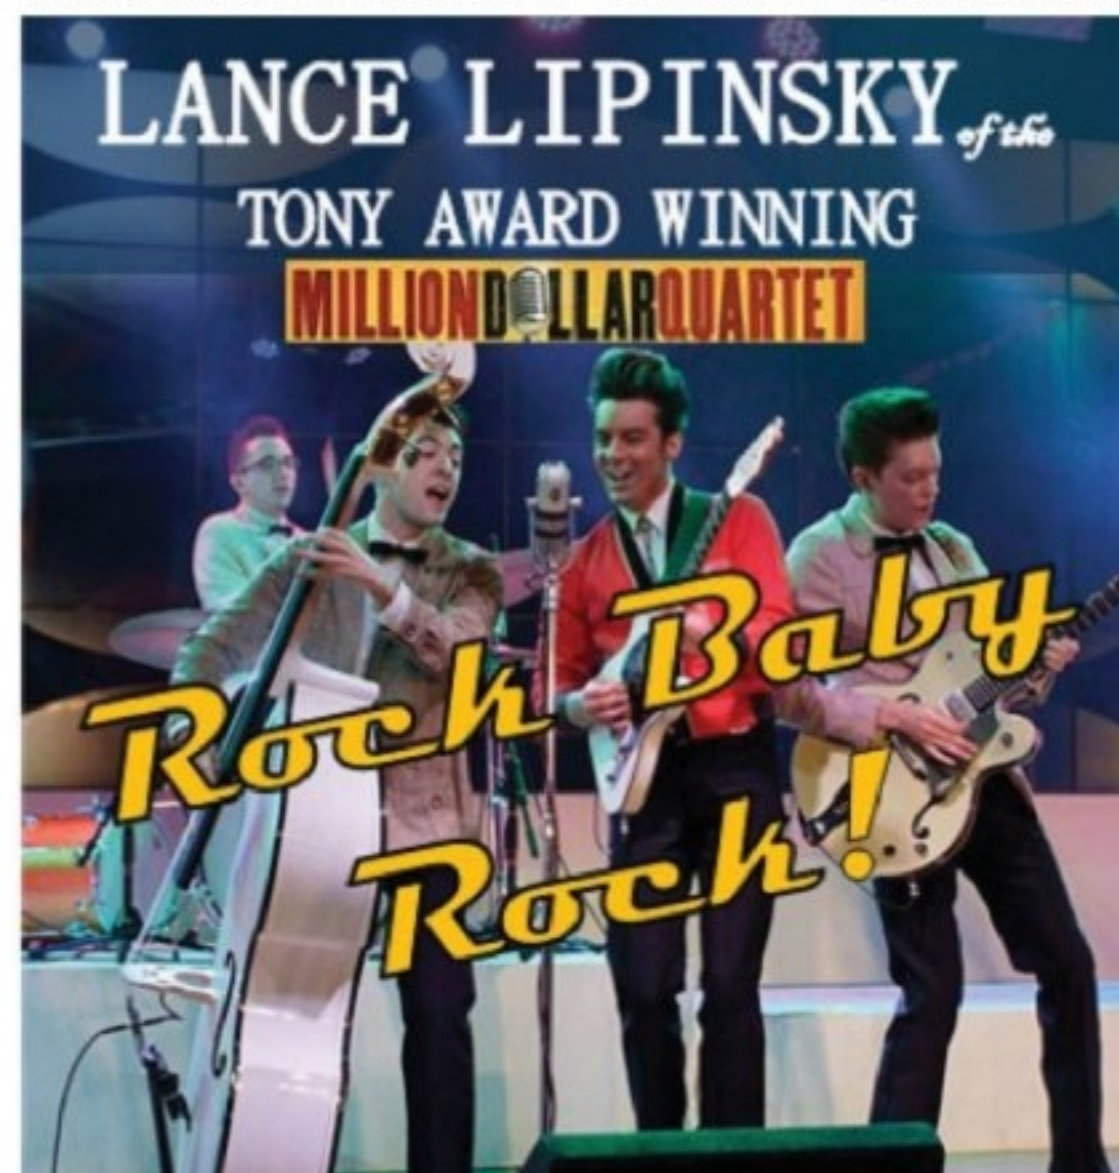

"I was surprised, because I was thinking I was getting older and getting soft," he says. "But no, it was interesting to learn that people care about the simple things as well as the big sweeping action."

"The Equalizer 2" debuts in theaters July 20.

SOCIAL-MEDIA FATIGUE

How do people do it? How do you switch off from social media? Lately, I've been starting to get weary every time I log onto my accounts — or even unlocking my phone for that matter. Early last year I tried to combat this by deactivating my Facebook. To be honest, it felt great to be free of some of the nonsense that was pummeling my feed day in and day out. But I did begin to lose touch with friends. Many jobs — including this one — require you to stay plugged in to things like Facebook and Twitter and it can create this surreal blur between what your professional life and your social life is. I thought Instagram would be my solution. But lately I feel that the neverending feed of stories and ever-plunging scroll of photos has taken the place of all of the accounts I've been trying to avoid. So here is my question to you, my fellow Grumblers: How do you keep yourself from using social media TOO much? Please send us all of your recommendations or innovative tips that people can use to make better

Almost half of all US adults who drink alcohol drink too much

A Boston University study found that many people imbibe in amounts that can cause severe health effects.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Binge drinking is practically part of American culture — it's depicted in movies and nearly an assumed part of everyone's college life. But aside from those nights of partying, how many people drink too much in general?

A lot of people, it turns out. A study out of Boston University found that out of all adults in the United States who drink alcohol, 40 percent drink too much, meaning in amounts that risk health consequences.

In the study, published this week in the Journal of Substance Use, Boston University School of Public Health researchers used data collected from interviews of more than 34,000 adults.

The survey assessed these participants' drinking in the past month, but what did researchers deem as "drinking too much"? For men, "at-risk use" was defined as "more than 14 drinks per week on average, or more than four on an occasion," while for women it was more than seven per week, or more than three on an occasion. (This is a bit different from binge drinking, which the CDC says typically happens when men consume five or more drinks or women consume four or more drinks in about two hours.)

Not only did 40 percent of respondents report that they drink too

How many adults drink too much? Of all the U.S. adults who drink alcohol, nearly half, according to new report. ISTOCK much, meaning at-risk amounts, but 73 percent of those drinking risky amounts were still doing so two to four years later. Plus, 15 percent of those who had not been drinking risky amounts began to do so by the time of the next survey.

The biggest predictor, researchers found, that someone would start to drink too much was their age: younger participants, especially those who were under the legal drinking age at the time of the first survey, were drinking at-risk amounts of alcohol by the second survey.

"These findings suggest that not only do many people who drink, drink amounts associated with health consequences, but that without intervention they are likely to continue to do so," said lead author Richard Saitz, professor of community health sciences at BUSPH, in a statement. "Screening or self-assessments, and counseling, feedback, or public health messaging have roles in interrupting these patterns. The predictors we identified may help target those efforts."

ZOOSK: SINGLES ARE MORE LIKELY TO DRINK ALCOHOL

Drinking and dating pretty much go hand-in-hand for many singles, but just how connected are the two? The answer is very, according to a new Zoosk dating survey.

Among the most notable findings is that singles are more likely to drink alcohol. In fact, 72 percent of respondents said they imbibe — and 32 percent of non-drinkers found it's harder to date when you don't.

Here are a few interesting points from Zoosk's study.

• First-date drinks

Nearly three-quarters, or 73 percent, of Zoosk dating survey respondents said grabbing drinks makes for an ideal first date, which 46 percent said is "easy and less formal." Twenty-seven percent find such dates "a good way to let your guard down and have a conversation."

• Early bird gets a predate drink

Ninety-two percent of singles think it's fine if their date orders a drink before they arrive, and just 2 percent said they'd judge them for doing so, while 6 percent would make a joke about it.

• East Coast enjoys imbibing

Singles along the East Coast appear to enjoy first-date drinks the most, with Washington, D.C., Massachusetts, Delaware, and Maryland in the top 4, and New Hampshire No. 6.

• Drinking and kissing

The Zoosk dating survey found that 60 percent of men think kissing is more fun after a few rounds. While 46 percent of women agree, 70 percent of Millennial men and 57 percent of millennial women do, too. NIKKI M. MASALI

Early voting in Boston announced for Massachusetts November 2018 election

Here's when and where you can vote early in Boston for the statewide election in November.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Are you eager to vote in the Massachusetts election this November? You're in luck — Boston will offer early voting this year, Mayor Marty Walsh announced this week.

The Massachusetts ballot questions have been finalized, so residents just need to know when and where to vote. Early voting in Boston will begin Monday, October 22 and run through

47,845

In Boston, 47,845 people voted early, representing 11.6 percent of registered voters, and across the commonwealth, more than 1 million residents, or 23 percent of the state's registered voters, cast their ballots ahead of election day.

Friday, Nov. 2, giving residents a chance to cast their votes ahead of the November 6 state election.

Early voting in Boston was unanimously approved for the 2018 election by the Boston Election Commission

Board. The practice was first offered statewide for the 2016 election, and was deemed a success: In Boston, 47,845 people voted early, representing 11.6 percent of registered voters, and across the commonwealth, more than one million residents, or 23 percent of the state's registered voters, cast their ballots ahead of election day.

"Ensuring all Boston voters are able to vote conveniently, and on their own schedule, is paramount to ensuring voter turnout," Walsh said in a statement. "Voting is core to our democracy, and I encourage Boston voters to take advantage of all the resources the City provides for elections."

Did you vote early in the 2016 Massachusetts election? DEREK KOUYOUNJIAN / METRO

How to vote early in Boston

Any voter registered in Boston can cast their ballot early at any early voting location. Unlike with absentee voting, you don't need to explain why you want to vote early, and you vote in person. You must be registered to vote at least 20 days before an election in Massachusetts. To see if you are registered to vote in Boston, check your voter registration at sec.state.ma.us/VoterRegistrationSearch/MyVoterRegStatus.aspx.

City Hall will serve as the main location for early voting in Boston. It will be open for voting Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. during the designated two week period. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, City Hall will stay open later, until 8 p.m. for those who want to vote early.

Pop-up polling locations will also be available throughout the city on Tuesdays and Thursdays during the early voting period and will be open from noon to 8 p.m.

The 2018 Vote Early Boston schedule also includes a full weekend of early voting on Saturday, October 27 and Sunday, October 28. During this weekend there will be nine voting locations — one in each city council district, according to the city — open on both days from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m.

5 Of America's favorite beach towns

It isn't summer without a trip to the beach.

Fodor's Travel

The sand is golden, the pace is slow, and at least five ice cream shops are within easy reach. That's the life of a beach town, whether its vibe is funky, historic, trendy, or serene. So what are you waiting for? Here are some of America's favorite beach towns.

La Jolla

Where: California
In a state made for beaching, La Jolla (derived from joya, the Spanish word for "jewel") offers the whole package. There are beautiful white-sand beaches, to be sure, but its tony village is filled with seafood restaurants,

La Jolla, California. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

upscale boutiques, sophisticated cafés, art galleries, and even a playhouse co-founded by actor Gregory Peck back in 1947. Stroll along Girard Avenue and Prospect Street, peeking into Warwick's (an indie bookstore), Legends Gallery (with paintings by Theodor Geisel, aka Dr. Seuss), and other one-of-a-kind shops. Be sure to time it so you catch the sunset from shimmering La Jolla Cove (where you'll also find the famous seals and sea lions).

Gulf Shores and Orange Beach

Where: Alabama
Here's a two-for-one. Gulf Shores and Orange Beach are two little beach towns sitting on a sublime stretch of sand along the Gulf of Mexico. And while they've got all the beachy amenities (including fab seafood restaurants), this region is also a nature lover's dream. There's a 28-mile flat, paved biking and hiking trail through Gulf State Park. You also have a zoo; dolphin cruises (best at sunset); and multiple mini-golf courses, including the Wharf in Orange Beach. Come during one of the many festivals, including the Hangout Music Festival, with three days of music on the beach; the National Shrimp Festival; and the Hangout Oyster Cookoff.

Ogunquit

Where: Maine
Beachy cottages set against a sparkling blue sea provide the epitome of New England perfection. A turn-of-the-century artist colony and fishing village, Ogunquit still possesses an artsy vibe with galleries (including the Ogunquit Museum of American Art) and the long-running Ogunquit Playhouse putting on Broadway-worthy shows. The best way to soak up its wild-sea-coast views (and perhaps set up your own canvas) is to stroll Marginal Way, a paved footpath running from the harbor to Ogunquit Beach, meandering past tangled bayberry and bittersweet bushes and pink and white sea roses along granite cliffs.

Chincoteague

Where: Virginia
The island resort town of Chincoteague offers something no one else can: adorable wild ponies roaming its beach (which are actually horses, just small from their salty-marshland diet). Anyone who's familiar with the child's story Misty of Chincoteague knows that Marguerite Henry wrote the whole story right here, based on her real-life story of attempting to raise a wild filly. You can stay at Miss Molly's, where, in 1947, Henry researched the tale. Spend long days at the beach, kayaking, and fishing, and enjoy fresh regional seafood at many local restaurants (try Bill's Seafood Restaurant).

Cape May

Where: New Jersey
Cape May may be the nation's oldest seaside resort, dating back to the 1790s, but it's no ancient relic. This charming beach town thrives, with pristine beaches, upscale restaurants and shops along Washington Street Mall, a full roster of year-round events and festivals, and even wineries popping up nearby. But what this town does best is its meticulously restored, garden-adorned Victorian houses—more than 600 of them, today occupied by romantic B&Bs, restaurants and boutiques. The horse-drawn carriages carrying couples down the picturesque streets do not look out of place.

Cape May is on the Atlantic Flyway, with all kinds of feathered visitors during spring and fall migration. The Cape May Bird Observatory hosts the annual World Series of Birding in spring (among other activities).

Ogunquit, Maine.

SPORTS

On the same day that Kawhi Leonard was traded to the Toronto Raptors, it was reported that the Boston Celtics were in serious talks with restricted free agent Marcus Smart about a four-year deal that would pay him somewhere between $10 million and $13 million per year.

By the time you read this, that deal might already be finalized. And that will be great news.

It's no coincidence that these talks got serious right after Leonard got traded. Previous reports had the Celtics trying to acquire Leonard from the Spurs, though, the specifics of any offers the C's might have made are still questionable.

The Raptors gave up DeMar DeRozan, Jakob Poeltl, and a protected 2019 first-round pick, while also acquiring Danny Green along with Leonard. Considering Leonard did not want to play in San Antonio and he can opt out to become a free agent next summer, it's a great trade for the Spurs, who will have DeRozan under contract for the next two seasons, and possibly a third, if they can get him to opt-in in for the 2020-21 season at $28 million.

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard

Meanwhile, the Raptors are taking a shot on Leonard, in the hopes that he might enjoy the city of Toronto, while also enjoying an opportunity to be a serious contender in the Eastern Conference every year, especially now that LeBron James is in LA. It'll be a challenge to keep Leonard away from free agency next summer, and I wouldn't put my money on him signing with the Raptors long-term, but I do admire the risk that Toronto is taking here, knowing they've lost in the second round of the playoffs the last two years, and also knowing that they can offer Leonard a five-year, $190 million contract next offseason.

Could the Celtics have matched what Toronto gave up? Probably. But Leonard's ability to become a free agent after this season most likely prevented them from giving up too much.

Who knows, maybe Danny Ainge will be a major player in trying to sign Leonard next summer. But for right now, with Leonard off the table, it's clear that Smart is the Celtics' new top priority. And he should be.

Smart should be considered untouchable. I've been telling you this for a few years. The fact that he's a "restricted" free agent helps, because the C's could always just match any offer that another team made to Smart this offseason. It also helps that Smart isn't an offensive stud.

In a league where contracts are getting more and more lucrative each year, crazy money isn't necessarily being dished out to guys who average just 10 points a season. That doesn't mean Smart isn't an extremely valuable asset to a championship contender. He is.

Marcus Smart looks for a call in the Eastern Conference Finals against Cleveland. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

He's just not going to command the interest of a big-name star, because of his shaky offensive game.

But like I said, Smart should be untouchable. His ferocious defense and undeniable passion is contagious. You saw that when he returned from a hand injury in Game 5 of their first-round playoff series against the Milwaukee Bucks this past April.

Smart only had nine points in 25 minutes, but he had a game-high three blocks and was diving all over the place for loose balls and creating havoc all night.

For everything the Celtics are and want to be under Brad Stevens — which is a team that never stops fighting — Smart's infectious on-court qualities quite possibly make him the team's captain.

Smart is just 24 years old. He was the Celtics' No. 6 overall pick in the 2014 Draft. He's been a key piece to Boston's success the last couple years.

Locking him up is a no-brainer.

THE RED SOX HAVE THE BEST RECORD IN BASEBALL at the MLB All-Star break, but that doesn't mean they have the best Vegas odds to win the World Series. The Sox have 22-3 odds of winning it all, while the defending champion Houston Astros top the list at 4-1.

Even if the Sox run away with the AL East and enter October with 110 wins or so, expect the Astros to be favored in any head-to-head series given their post-season experience. The scripts have flipped here, in a sense, as the Sox were always thought of as the tried and true franchise in MLB with David Ortiz in the lineup. But Big Papi has been gone for a year and a half now, and it's a new era in Boston under Alex Cora.

Cora could actually be the key to the Sox upsetting the Astros in a potential playoff series as he was Houston's bench coach last year. Cora is an expert at figuring out opposing team's quirks (namely pitch tipping), and he surely knows a little more than the average cat about Houston's staff.

Other teams with high odds of taking home the Commissioner's Trophy include the Cubs at 22-3, the Yankees at 9-1, the Dodgers at 23-2, and the Indians at 23-2.

Alex Cora. GETTY IMAGES

The best value play here may be with the Milwaukee Brewers, who own 24-1 odds despite owning the second best record in MLB behind the Cubs.

The Brewers already had one of the most underrated lineups in baseball before adding Lorenzo Cain and Christian Yelich this past offseason. - Matt Burke
